The technology used in the enhancements to gameplay and mechanics for FIFA 22, combined with vast improvements in the fluidity of the player animations and ball physics, provide a realistic experience of a real-world match. Improved Active Attack and AI FIFA 22 introduces "Active Attack" so that players can attack the ball from the moment the opponent stops playing and is ready to receive the pass. This can be done from all sorts of attacking positions, such as on the ball with players in the centre of the pitch, or by a player "jumping" on the ball to initiate an attack from the sidelines. For the first time in FIFA on PlayStation, "AI" has been defined as a strategic variable so that the AI can make its own decisions about when to "Active Attack" on-ball. "Active Attack" is based on a physics system that will provide a more realistic on-ball experience. One aspect of this is that during "Active Attack" the pace of the action will vary depending on the proximity of the opponent's players to the ball. For example, a player will receive an accurate pass from a distance of 6 metres, even though an opponent a metre away could potentially catch the pass (Figure 1). Players will "wish to attack" (i.e. they will actively seek to receive the pass) or "will actively attack" (they will actively look to run towards the ball with the aim of passing or shooting) the ball. In reality, players make their decisions about where and when they want to receive the ball based on the information they have about their opponents. FIFA 22 will allow players to learn about their opponents, using their experience to make smart decisions. In addition to "Active Attack," all the mechanics of receiving the ball have been re-engineered to be more responsive to the player. Players can receive the ball from any part of the pitch and will accurately predict which type of pass they will receive based on the context of the pitch. The system will also enable players to make decisions in terms of how and when to pass the ball and, in turn, receive the ball, enabling the team to control possession. Improved AI Decision-Making FIFA 22 introduces "Active AI" so that the AI will have their own strategy to exploit the ball in possession. For example, after receiving the ball, they can decide to
