Russia's U.N. Ambassador Vitaly Churkin said Thursday in a statement that "the current version of the Security Council webpage on the Internet is unavailable for Russia," and that "the delegation has been unable to gain access to the website." The statement, which was delivered at an emergency council meeting on Syria, offered no details about why Russia's access had been blocked. Churkin said he would be informed when more was known. The Syrian government has accused rebels in the country's east of using chemical weapons on a number of occasions since the start of the conflict, which has killed more than 100,000 people and forced millions to flee their homes. The United Nations says the use of chemical weapons is contrary to international law and some countries, including the U.S., have said that Syria's chemical weapons stockpile must be dismantled and removed. The Syrian government "has identified the location of chemical weapons stocks and is currently working with the United States of America to remove these chemical weapons in accordance with the Chemical Weapons Convention," said the statement by U.N. spokesman Farhan Haq. Russia has thwarted three proposed U.N. resolutions on Syria, and failed to secure support for a Russian draft resolution on the implementation of an agreement reached last
