To start with, I'll say that you should go with the Linux version of Vuze if you're a Linux user. This is because the Linux version of Vuze is much faster than the Windows or Mac version.

Additionally, you can run both the Linux and Windows version of Vuze simultaneously. That's not the case for the Mac version of Vuze. You cannot run both simultaneously. I don't use either version. I stopped using Vuze on the Mac many years ago. I instead used torrent downloaders such as Transmission, Transmission BitTorrent, uTorrent, Azureus, and Download Accelerator Pro.

I use these tools only to download files because they are simple to use and get the job done.

Want Apple's newest operating system, Lion? Unfortunately, you can't download it directly from Apple's own site. All you can do is buy a legitimate and discounted upgrade, which Apple calls an "Internet OS Install Disc". As such, it's a slightly less expensive alternative to a full download.

Uncounted hundreds of products can be found on eBay for just a few dollars. This applies to Apple products, too, but is particularly popular with those seeking an Apple MacBook or MacBook Pro. If you're shopping around for an Apple product, be sure to look at eBay. They frequently have excellent prices for authentic Apple products. The Sierra beta versions available for download on Apple's developer site are only available to registered developers. Whether or not you're a developer, you can sign up for the free Apple beta software program through the Mac App Store, and download the latest beta build of macOS Sierra. It's available for download in both Mac OS X 10.11 and 10.12 editions. You can also download the Sierra Mac App for your Mac using the link below.
